

Wisconsin Meat Industry Hall of Fame

"Wisconsin is still probably the best when it comes to high-quality processed meats and sausages," says former University of Wisconsin, College of Agricultural and Life Sciences Dean Elton Aberle. "We've also got some of the best producers of sausages in the country."

The purpose of the Wisconsin Meat Industry Hall of Fame is to recognize contributions of individuals who have had a significant impact on the meat industry of Wisconsin. The contribution may be a business venture, an idea, a process or invention, an educational effort, a leadership role or any other effort which has influenced positively the people and environment of the state of Wisconsin. The accomplishment is broadly interpreted as related to the production, distribution and consumption of meat products.

The rationale for this effort is to compile a historical documentation of achievements which will be in a permanent and accessible location. It will be an ongoing program. The concept is to recognize, record and thereby ensure not only a lasting tribute but equally important to serve as a challenge for greater accomplishments in future generations.

Each year, a committee of academic and industrial leaders in the field solicits nominations for honorees. Those who are selected receive a plaque and are celebrated with a photo and biography in the Hall placed alongside the other distinguished Hall of Fame inductees.
